A Plain Statement of Facts.

25 and 27 Cedar street,
New York, Sept. 8, 1856.

I have just read an attack made by Dr. D. M. Reese, in his monthly publication, upon Dr. Robert Hunter, of this city, endeavoring in the most uncourteous manner, and by the most paltry quibble, to injure Dr. Hunter through me: although Dr. Reese known that I attribute to Dr. Hunter's treatment of my case by inhalation, and to no other cause, the saving of my life and the uninterrupted good health I have enjoyed for more than two years.

I was formerly one of the firm of Hall, Clayton & Co., of the Commercial Advertiser job printing office. My brother, J. G. Clayton, was also, and is yet of the same firm beside being one of the editors of the Commercial Advertiser. All which facts Dr. Reese knows well.

Dr. Hunter never asked me to publish a statement of my case, although had he done so at any time within two years—that is, since I felt that my health was permanently reestablished—I should most cheerfully have complied. My case was editorially alluded to, however, in the columns of the Commercial Advertiser, because well known in that office. It was also mentioned editorially in the Daily Express of June 16, in vindication from a former attack made by Dr. Reese, (at least my case was the one alluded to.) The Express quoted as patients successfully treated by Dr. Hunter, "Messrs. Clayton, of the Commercial Advertiser; Jones, one of the proprietors of the Daily Times; Bennett, (editor and proprietor) of the Herald, and other, &c."

Now although Dr. Reese knew that I was formerly of the firm of the Commercial Advertiser job printing office, he wilfully distorts the sentence, making it apply to my brother, and on that quibble assails Dr. Hunter's veracity in the grossest manner, asserting that my brother has been his (Dr. Reese's) "patient for many years," and that he was "never treated by Hunter at all." And yet Dr. Reese knew that I also had been his patient until I found no benefit resulting from his treatment, and that when hope had pretty well left me, I consulted Dr. Hunter, of 828 Broadway, and was cured by his treatment.

The latter part of 1853 I was attacked with pleurisy, so called by Dr. Reese, who attended me and advise me to go South. I went to Charleston, S.C., remained a month—found no benefit—returned to New York, and still continued sinking, losing flesh and appetite, and daily growing more helpless and hopeless. My expectoration was very bad, streaked with blood—my cough racking, night sweats profuse. In fact I had all the worst symptoms of diseased lungs. And so little benefit had I ever derived from the practice then pursued, that I gave up all hope of living, and all use of medicines, sold out my interest in the printing office, and looked for my death, from which I thought no earthly means could then save me.

Such was my condition when I was told of the success of Dr. Robert Hunter, and advised to consult him without delay. I did so. He examined me—told me my case was a serious one—gave me no promise more than to do his best for me, and put me at once under active treatment by inhalation. This was in February, 1854. A few days satisfied me that the medicines I inhaled were acting favorably and directly on my disease. The worst symptoms diminished. My courage increased. My improvement went on steadily, and I persevered for months. In May following I was able to resume office duties; and from that time to this I have not been ill a single day—am less liable to colds than formerly, and am in better health and weigh more than I have done for ten years. Are these not facts for which to be grateful? Moreover, Dr. Hunter's kindness and attention to me during that trying time can never be forgotten.

Now, all these facts Dr. Reese knows as well as I do. I repeat it. For I have conversed with him more than once on the subject, and always saw it seemed to annoy him. How then can he ignore my case in this his last attempt to injure Dr. Hunter? My case is well known, but is only thus brought before the public to repel an unprovoked attack on the veracity and reputation of a professional gentleman of the highest merits. I deeply regret the occasion, but am happy to have it in my power to give this statement of facts without further comment. JAS. H. CLAYTON.

HUMAN PHYSIOLOGY,
Statical and Dynamical; or, The Conditions and Course of the Life of Man. By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M. D., LL. D., Professor of Chemistry and Physiology in the University of New York. Illustrated by nearly 300 fine woodcuts from photographs. 650 pages, 8vo., muslin, $4; sheep, $4 25.

This work, as its title sets forth, is a publication of the lectures on physiology which have been given for many years in the University of New York by the author, and is intended not only for the medical profession, but also for the general reader.

Its aim is, by presenting the chief doctrines and facts of physiology in a readable form, to contribute to the diffusion of that science among the people, who certainly cannot have a subject more worthy of their attention than the structure and manner of action of their own bodies—a kind of knowledge of which there is unfortunately a most deplorable deficiency, it being quite true, as the author says, that even among educated, but non-professional persons, there is scarcely one to be found who has a distinct idea of the size, shape and position of his own stomach; to fill which, however, seems to be in modern times the great object of human existence.

Books on anatomy and physiology labor under a considerable difficulty in obtaining general circulation, on account of the nature of some of the topics on which they are obliged to treat. It is, however, hoped, that in this case the care that has been taken in that respect will make the work acceptable to every reader.

Who is there that does not feel an interest in knowing why a man is obliged to eat, and drink, and breathe? what are the changes which the food undergoes in being digested? how it is absorbed into the system, one part being used here and another there, just in the places where they are wanted? how the blood, impelled by the heart, flows perpetually in every artery and vein? how in all countries of the world and all seasons of the year our bodies are at the same temperature? how in the course of a few months every part has been removed and reconstructed, yet with an identity of personal appearance? Who is there that is not curious to know something of the wonderful structure of the brain and nervous system, through which our intellectual principle maniests its presence and power?

It is the object of this work to disseminate such knowledge, which is not only a gratification to the intelligent mind, but which may be of unspeakable use in times of sickness. With a clear view of the construction of his own body, and the action of its parts, a man is far better judge of the nature and cause of his ailments, perhaps, also, of the best way of curing them. It would do no kind of harm if the head of every family had a little of such information. Nor is the use of works on physiology confined to these merely individual advantages. They also enlarge our conceptions respecting the whole human race, giving us philosophical ideas of our connection with animated nature generally, and our position in the world.

The author has accordingly divided his work into two parts, the first treating of the conditions under what an individual maintains his well being, the second of his career or advance. It is illustrated by nearly 300 wood engravings, executed in the best style, the greater part of which are from photographs, a method which has not hitherto been extensively resorted to in scientific books.

This work may be especially recommended to professional men, who will find in it an exposition of the science in its present state. It contains the most recent discoveries and views which have been published in England, France, and Germany. But it must not be supposed that it is only a compilation, for though the author in his preface speaks with diffidence of his own contributions, competent judges of the subject will very readily recognize that there is scarcely a chapter which does not contain laborious original experiments and new views.

To the educated man—the scholar—it will doubtless present a special interest, in exhibiting the rapid advances which the physical sciences in their connection with organization have been making within the last half dozen years, and the nature of their impression on intellectual and metaphysical philosophy. In this particular, it reflects the tone of thought which is prevailing among the scientific all over Europe.

The teacher of physiology and the medical student will find in it a text book, in which the subjects are arranged and treated of in a manner which an experience of many years has shown to be adapted to these purposes. The aim of the author has been to constitute a book in this respect a practical work, which, within a moderate compass, by the aid of good illustrations may meet the wants of those engaged in teaching or studying the science.

BAIRD'S MODERN GREECE.
Modern Greece: a Narrative of a Residence and Travels in that Country. With Observations on its Antiquities, Literature, Language, Politics and Religion. By Henry M. Baird, M. A. Illustrated by about sixty engravings. 12mo., muslin, $1 25.

This interesting and valuable work is the result of rare opportunities of observation enjoyed by the author during a residence in Greece, and extensive travels in every part of that country. There has been nothing for years past on the subject so accurate in its delineation of national character, and so able and scholarly in the treatment of historical and scientific connections.
