American History!

of He for Subferners bails the Host, And takes their Coffe; but wheth's the Book?"

Of all the attempts ever yet made, by any individual, to infult this country, it appears to me that none can equal the unparal-lelled Propolals of the Divine Beggar of Rox-bury, who is to publish bu History of our late glorion; Revolution-Where ?-Why, in bis own country. Corlous enough indeed !-We are modefily called upon to pry half the Subscription down!-What then-Why, the Divine Beggar or Proposer, then takes pullage for that which of all other countries upon earth is most invoterately intmical to our United States. which cannot tell et upon the late revolution without the most malignant eney and re-more, and the generality of whole people would wish to link into everlating perdition the whole of our American foil with all the irhabitants thereof. But that is not all, the Bengh Historian of our Revolution, has in this country, discovered himself to be no real friend to us or to miny of our fleuing brill liant characters; both of which he may abuse and whity In his own country, without fear of proper chaftlement, and without again being obliged to use the same pititul, juggling, Jefutural conduct which (if fame, fays, true) be to meanly made use of on, a very temarkable octation-andeavouring by prevarication to deny the TRUTTI;—infitting that a piece, of which he was the Aurdon; was not written by him, nor everyand by him until he faw and read it in the news-papers He (fame fays) dictated to his wife, who wrote, or was the amenuends on the occasion, when written delivered the pieceto, it's author, and he carried it, hunfilf, to the Printer.

Now, it this Rory be true (and if it be not, we will believe his publick denial thereof in any of OUR news-papers) what an excellent true History may we not expect from so candid and boudrable a writer i - Another matter of no little moment to the payers-down of their no fitter moment to the payers down of their cash is, what ficturity have they that they first ever receive this impurital History?—The word of the proposer.—They may do as they will, but no man of common lense, I should fuppof. , would now a days be perfectly fatifhed with the mere verbum facerdotes a ture I am that no one possessed of one spark of patriotifia will encourage any work, the materials of which are the growth ar produce of our own country, but which our encountry are to receive the probts of manufacturing, and then of fending back to us, in order to take full
